WAKEFIELD

1868 – A Centennial – 1968

By RUTH WOODBURY

One hundred years ago, on the 1st of July, 1868, by vote of the qualified voters and by an act of Legislature, WAKEFIELD became the name of the old town of South Reading.

Cyrus Wakefield, the leading citizen and owner of the largest industry, had offered to build a new town hall containing a Soldier's Memorial Hall in memory of the men who had died in the Civil War. Mr. Wakefield's offer included the lot of land at the corner of Main and Water Streets and $30,000, plus $5,000 if needed, to construct a new town hall to replace the small wooden hall built in 1834 on Church Street.

The town's action was taken in appreciation of his generosity and, no doubt, in recognition of the prosperity and growth it had experienced which was to a large degree the result of the success of his Rattan Factory.

South Reading had been a part of the old town or Reading, settled in 1638 as Linn Village and incorporated in 1644 as a new township in Massachusetts Bay Colony. What is now North Reading was added to the town in 1651; Greenwood was annexed from Malden in 1727 and was called the South District until 1845.

The earliest center of the old town was the southern part, around what is now Wakefield Common. The first church was built here; the town meeting assembled here. However, in 1812, because of political differences, the part of old Reading which is now Wakefield, including Greenwood, was set off as a separate town called South Reading. The population was about 800.

By 1845 the population had nearly doubled. There were 1,500 people living in South Reading when the Boston & Maine Railroad built a line through Malden, South Reading, and Reading to connect at Wilmington with its line to Haverhill and the north. With the opening of rail service to Boston rapid changes began to take place in the village.

At the close of the Civil War in 1865, it was apparent that better town facilities were required to keep pace with the increasing population. New schools, better streets, and a new town hall were imperative needs.

It was at this point that Mr. Wakefield made his generous offer of a new town hall, for which he eventually gave over $120,000.

The offer of the hall had been accepted by the Town in January 1868, and the petition to change its name from South Reading to Wakefield was approved by the Legislature and signed by the Governor in February.

South Reading became Wakefield on July 1st. The occasion was celebrated on a scorching July 4th with "a national salute at sunrise," band concerts, parades, a banquet, and long speeches and poems written for the event. A Rowing Regatta on Quannapowitt and fireworks in the evening ended the celebration.

The era of modern utilities dates from 1890 when electricity was introduced. This was quickly followed by telephone service and electric street cars in 1892. The street cars were followed, naturally, by the need for more new schools. The brick Lincoln, Greenwood, Franklin, Hurd, and Warren Schools were built, and the Greenwood School enlarged, all in a ten-year period.

The Town bought the Citizens Gas Light Company in 1894, the Water Company in 1903, and constructed the sewer system between 1900 and 1902.

By 1905 the central part of Wakefield had all the public and private utilities that serve it in 1968.

During the first 50 years of this century the town's progress was continuous but not unusual. The impact on Wakefield of World War I, the financial depression of the early 1930's, and World War II was much the same as it was on similar communities in this area.

A great demand for new houses followed World War II. Building permits totaling about one and a half million dollars were issued in Wakefield in 1947, much of that amount for houses. In 1940 there were 400 cows in town; in 1948 there were only 13. The pastures and hay fields were being divided into house lots, and the population in 1950 was 19,633.

Before World War II plans for a circumferential highway around Boston were being studied, and soon after the war ended the construction of Route 128 began. The entire highway was not built at one time, but the section through Wakefield, opened in August 1951, was one of the earlier parts to be completed.

Business and industrial plants along Route 128 have improved the economic basis of most of the towns and cities through which it passes. Wakefield is one of the fortunate communities. The assessed value of the development on Route 128 is now about $6,500,000. The State Census of 1965 reported the town's population as 25,572.

In December 1950 Mr. Wakefield's town hall was badly damaged by fire. In 1958, ninety years from the date of Cyrus Wakefield's gift, the brick town hall was demolished.
